Rectilinear

Rectilinear calls it the world's fastest bookshelf speaker.

This is the new all-out bookshelf speaker from the people who make the much-acclaimed Rectilinear III floorstanding system. It's called the Rectilinear X (that's a ten, not an ex) and it's designed like no other speaker system in the world. The midrange driver carries nearly all of the music, with the woofer contributing only to the extreme bass and the tweeter to the extreme treble.

Rectilinear claims that this results in lower time delay distortion, which they believe is the coming thing for testing ultrasophisticated loudspeakers. It seems that speakers don't "speak" the instant a signal is fed into them but remain silent for a good many microseconds. And the faster they speak, the more natural the sound.

The Rectilinear X is claimed to have lower time delay distortion than any other bookshelf speaker. In other words, it's the fastest. All we know is that its sound is utterly natural, without a trace of that canned "hi-fi" zinginess. Which, among knowledgeable people, should also make it move fast.
